

Tracy Z. Maleeff

Information Security Analyst
The New York Times Company

April 15, 2021 11:00 AM -12.20 PM ET

Register here in advance for this meeting*

This event is only open to the Temple community*

“The Relevance of Liberal Arts Majors in Cybersecurity”

Tracy Z. Maleeff, aka @InfoSecSherpa, is an Information Security Analyst for The New York Times Company. Prior to joining the Info Sec field, Tracy worked as a librarian in academic, corporate, and law firm libraries.

She holds a Master of Library and Information Science degree from the University of Pittsburgh in addition to undergraduate degrees from both Temple University (magna cum laude) and the Pennsylvania State University. While a member of the Special Libraries Association, Tracy received the Dow Jones Innovate Award, the Wolters Kluwer Law & Business Innovations in Law Librarianship award, and was named a Fellow.

Tracy has been featured in the Tribe of Hackers: Cybersecurity Advice and Tribe of Hackers: Leadership books. She also received the Women in Security Leadership Award from the Information Systems Security Association. Tracy publishes a daily Information Security & Privacy newsletter, and maintains an OSINT blog. A native of the Philadelphia area, she lives and dies with its sports teams.

You can follow Tracy Z. Maleeff on Twitter @InfoSecSherpa.

For more information about the CARE Lab: <https://sites.temple.edu/care/>

For more information about the Women in Cybersecurity Chapter at Temple, visit <https://sites.temple.edu/wicys/>